

Manuel F. Correllus State Forest

Welcome to DCR's Manuel Correllus State Forest

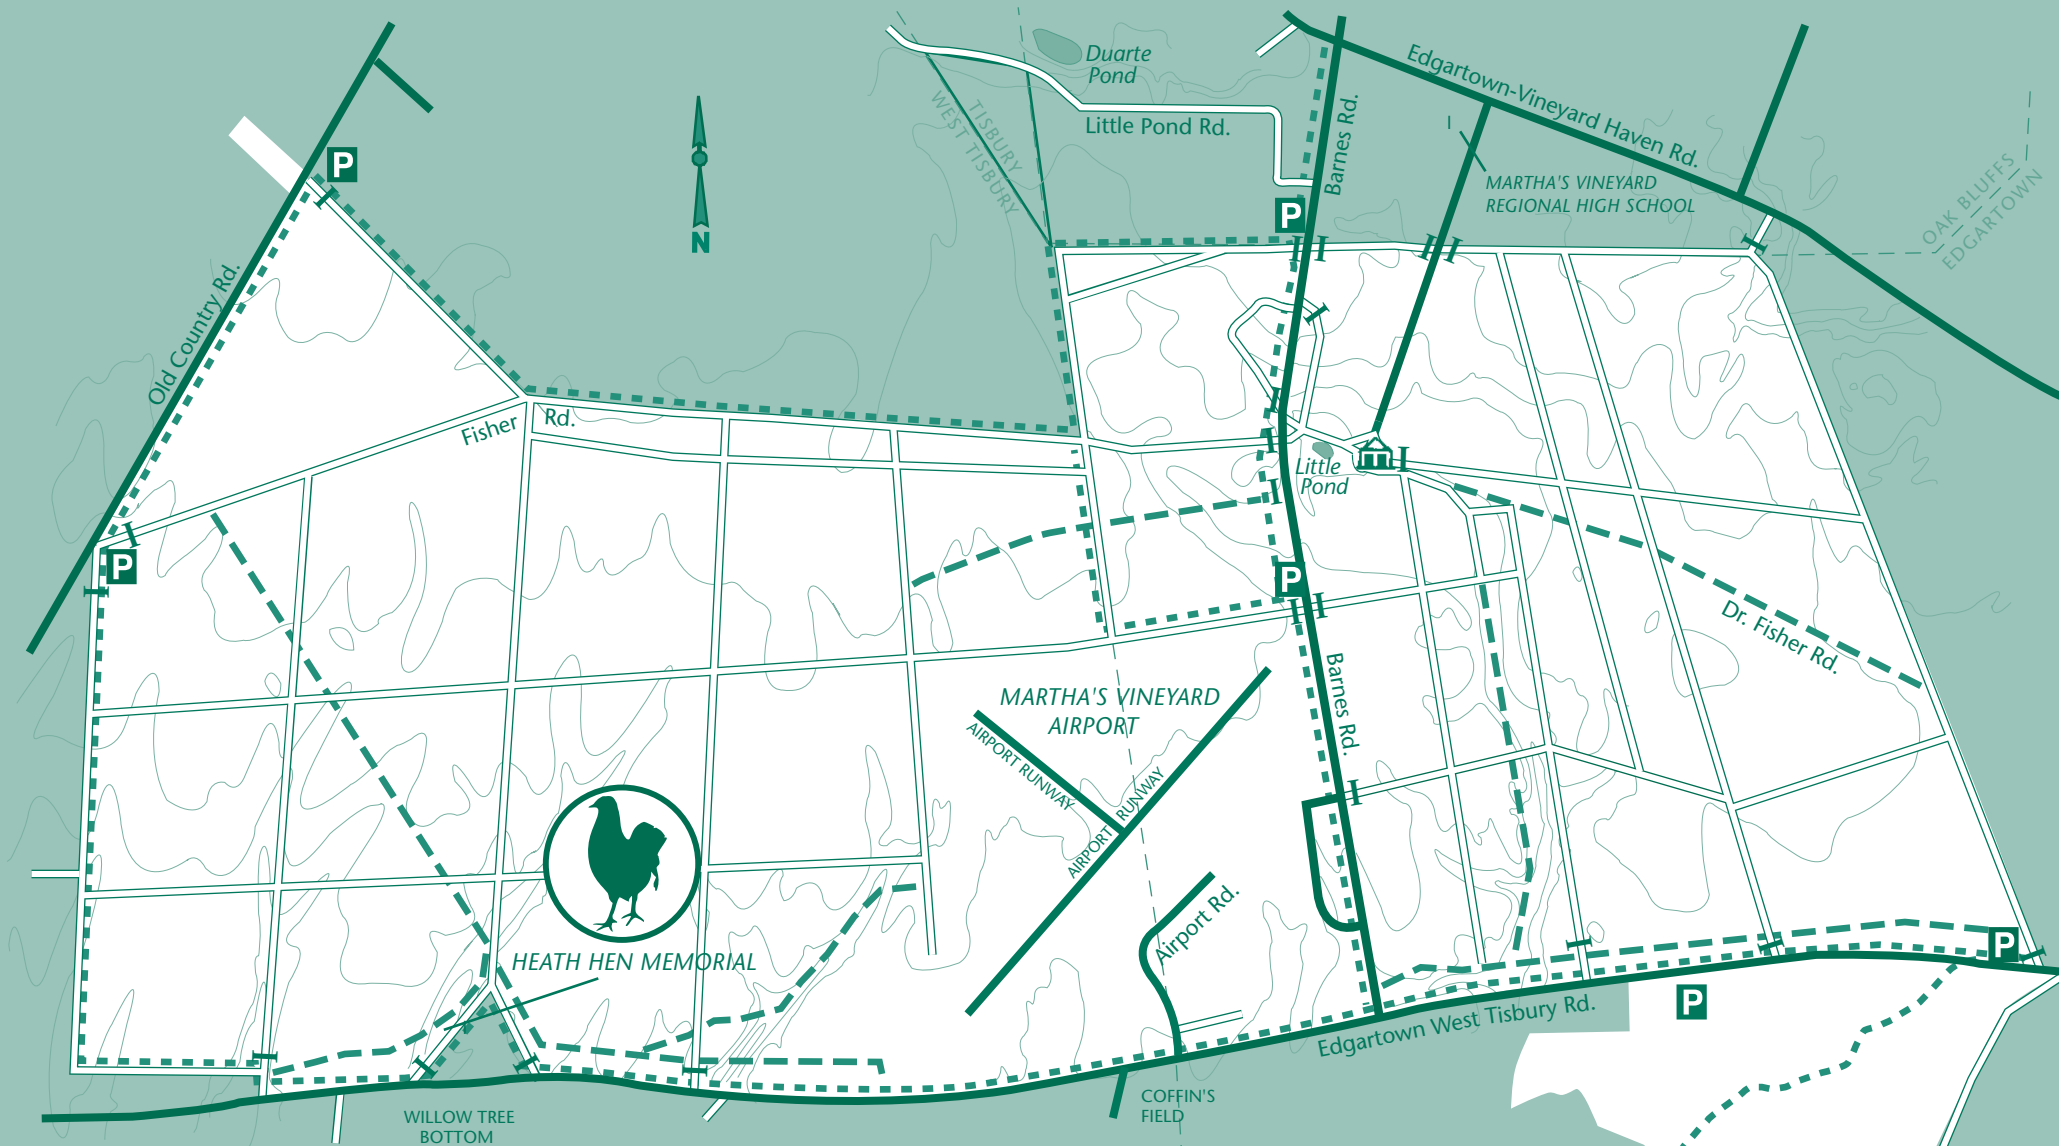

The Heath Hen Sculpture at Manuel Correllus State Forest

The Heath Hen was once plentiful along the eastern coast. By 1870, due to over-hunting and habitat loss, the last few hundred Heath Hens in the world were limited to Martha's Vineyard. Although efforts to save the species were unsuccessful, they paved the way for modern-day conservation. Manuel F. Correllus State Forest is the lasting legacy of the once plentiful Heath Hen.

The Heath Hen statue, sculpted by Todd McGrain, can be found by taking a five to ten-minute walk into the forest from Gate 18 or Gate 19 on the West Tisbury-Edgartown Road. Visitors will learn more about 'Booming Ben' and the important conservation message contained in the story of the Heath Hen.
